|| Molecular Biology || Professor Naomi Hamburg Awarded $03.7 Million to Study How Endothelial Cell Health Impacts Disease ||

|| Sunday: October 08: 2023 || á. Professor Naomi Hamburg, MD, the Joseph A Vita Professor of Medicine at Boston University Chobanian and Avedisian School of Medicine, has been awarded $03.7 million grant from the National Heart, Lung and Blood Institute for her research study, 'Endothelial Cell Health Across the Spectrum of Cardiometabolic Disease'. Cardiometabolic diseases are a group of common but, often, preventable conditions, including heart attack, stroke, diabetes, insulin resistance and non-alcoholic fatty liver disease.

The escalating prevalence of cardiometabolic risk factors, including obesity and type two diabetes mellitus:T2DM, presents a critical cardiovascular challenge. Individuals with cardiometabolic disease harbour greater risk of cardiovascular disease:CVD, including accelerated vascular aging and premature blood vessel blockages. Importantly, changes in the endothelial cells, that line blood vessels predate the development of clinical CVD. Endothelial cell health is a window into early heart disease risk. Getting a glimpse into endothelial cells from people has potential to help create new treatments to protect blood vessel health. “Experimental studies and our prior work link altered metabolism to organelle, sub-cellular structure, that has one or more specific jobs to perform in the cell stress, including mitochondrial dysfunction and stress.

In this proposal, we hypothesise that organelle stress, induced by cardiometabolic traits drives vascular dysfunction and promotes CVD.” Says Professor Hamburg, who is, also, the Chief of the Vascular Biology section and the Interim Director of the Whitaker Cardiovascular Institute at the School.

This Study will leverage a unique and highly experienced multi-disciplinary team of investigators with expertise in obesity-related cardiovascular disease, endothelial biology, population science, translational patient-oriented research, multi-omics and bio-informatics to study endothelial cell health at an unprecedented scale.

Using resources from the Framingham Heart Study, Professor Hamburg and her team will investigate the association of T2DM and cardiometabolic traits with endothelial cells:EC phenotype, including organelle stress and nitric oxide.

Professor Hamburg is a cardiologist and vascular medicine specialist at Boston Medical Centre and a recognised expert in the field of vascular medicine and the clinical translation of vascular biology. Her research work, which seeks to understand approaches to restore vascular health in patients with cardiometabolic disorders and peripheral artery disease and to evaluate the impact of novel tobacco products and long COVID-19, has been continuously funded by the National Institutes of Health and other foundations for the past 15 years.

She has developed highly innovative approaches to study endothelial cells from patients to dissect the mechanisms of disease and identify new targets for heart disease therapies. Professor Hamburg has held multiple leadership positions in the field of Vascular Medicine, including the Chair of the Peripheral Vascular Disease Council of the American Heart Association and as a board member of the Society of Vascular Medicine, American Society of Echocardiography and Vascular Testing Division of the Intersocietal Accreditation Commission.

She co-chaired the Advanced Training Statement on Vascular Medicine from the American College of Cardiology and the Society of Vascular Medicine.

She has authored more than 150 scientific papers in the peer-reviewed literature and has served on guideline writing committees. She is a past Associate Editor of the journal Vascular Medicine and current Associate Editor for Circulation Research. Professor Hamburg is passionate about improving the care of vascular diseases and mentoring scientists and physicians.

Humanics: All-For-One-One-For-All

|| Selfishness Is the Most Definitive Way to, Absolutely, Harm One's Very Own Self, As Well As, Everyone and Everything Else: In Other Words, Selfishness Is Nothing But Absolute, Complete and Comprehensive Absence of Questioning or Thoughtfulness or Consideration, Which Makes Us Think and That, Thus, Enables Us to Reach the Rational Base and Foundation in Life and in Existence: This Means That Selfishness, Actually, Is a Terminal Enemy of the Agency of the Human Mind, Which It Keeps on Tearing Away and Apart by Being Devoid of Questioning and Thoughtfulness Because the Very Agency of the Human Mind Is a 'Structure', Created by the Architectonics of the Architecture of Human Rationality, Which Requires a Human Agency of the Human Mind to Put It to Use by Thinking, Questioning, Consideration, Analysing, Learning and Developing, All of Which Selfishness Terminates: Humanics: Humanics: All-For-One-One-For-All ||
